Taylor Stresses Duty of Students To Help Faculty

Common Room, June 8. "The raising of faculty salaries now is a question of the preservation of the college," asserted Mrs. Pamela C. Taylor, retiring president of the Alumnae Association, at a meeting of all alumnae, graduates and undergraduates on campus. The present faculty salary scale was set in 1920 and obviously is insufficient now.

A unanimous vote of the alumnae council approved holding a drive for funds. Mrs. Caroline McCormick Slade was elected chairman.

"Alumnae have always been concerned with faculty salaries," Mrs. Slade stated. "The president and the faculty run the college and keep it going while the alumnae own it."

Between two and three million dollars are needed in order to increase faculty salaries sufficiently. This amount cannot be raised unless every student is "a messenger in her own home and country of what Bryn Mawr means," according to Mrs. Slade.

"We of Bryn Mawr have the chance for an education that will train us to go ahead in our time and become citizens of the world;" we would not have this advantage without our faculty, and therefore we must support it adequately.

Early Discoveries In Medical Work, Technique Studied

Oppenheimer Discusses Hunter Brothers In New Book

Contributed by L. Mezger, '46
"Perhaps there is nothing in Nature more pleasing than the study of the human mind, even in its imperfections or depravities..." It is from the point of view of this statement by John Hunter that Miss Jane M. Oppenheimer has approached an investigation into the lives of two famous doctors of eighteenth century England. In "New Aspects of John and William Hunter," published by Henry Schuman, New York, 1946, with a Foreword by Fenwick Beekman, M. D., an interpretation of old and newly discovered facts has been made to give a picture of the personalities and world of the two brothers, John and William Hunter.

The first essay, "Everard Home and the Destruction of the John Hunter Manuscripts," attempts to find the possible motive Everard Home could have had for destroying the unpublished manuscripts of his lifelong teacher and friend after his death. The problem is approached mainly by an analysis of Home's personality and background and to a lesser degree that of his chief accuser, William Clift. The intellect and personality of John Hunter, the man who made surgery a science, are also revealed. Of the two essays this is the more interesting; the evidence is accumulated, weighed and then the

Alumnae Pass New Drive Plan For Next Year

The Alumnae Association held its annual meeting at 2 P.M. Saturday, in Goodhart, at which it voted to proceed with the Drive next autumn. Mrs. F. Louis Slade (Caroline McCormick) was elected National Chairman, and Mrs. James Chadwick-Collins, of Bryn Mawr, Executive Director. The meeting was addressed by Mrs. Francis H. Taylor (Pamela Coyne), and was followed by a meeting of the student body at which Mrs. Slade spoke.

The Drive plans to take care of the College's need for additional income due to increased expenses and faculty salaries which were established by the 1920 Endowment Drive and are now insufficient. During the war the College was able to make certain economies which enabled it to balance the budget; now, however, prices are still high, while the faculty salary budget returns to its maximum, and graduate scholarships are necessary in fuller measure. The fees have already been increased for graduates and undergraduates, and any further increase would make it increasingly difficult for many students to come to Bryn Mawr.

The Alumnae Association hopes, therefore, to raise, through the Drive, additional money either for endowments or expenditure over a period of years, increasing the yearly income by about $60,000. The Drive will be divided into two parts: one, the obtaining as quickly as possible the necessary money for faculty salary increases and scholarship funds, and two, a long range program for both academic and building projects, the latter to include such buildings as language houses, the biology and physics wings of Park Hall, and necessary improvements in the Library.

Biologists to Do Summer Research

This summer Dalton Hall will be the scene of at least three experiments in biology, to be performed by Miss Gardiner, Mr. Berry, and five students.

Ruth Leyendecker, Margaret Hilgartner, and Alice Hedge of the present graduating class, Rosemary Gilmartin '47, and Evelyn Haller, a graduate student, will assist in making experiments on phagocytosis, the ability of the white blood cells to eat up bacteria. The fact that anemia increases phagocytosis was first observed in humans; last year Mr. Berry and Miss Haller found the same phenomenon in rats. During the summer the biologists will bleed mice to see if this increases the resistance to bacterial infection.

In her honors work Ruth Leyendecker discovered that the injection of small amounts of detergent, soluble soap, increased phagocytosis greatly. Ruth will spend part of the summer on further investigations into this problem.

The students will live with Miss Gardiner for the summer.

ENGAGEMENT

Faith Is Needed In World of Today, Rev. Mutch Says

Goodhart, June 11.—"The time has come for us in America when a half-hearted devotion will not suffice, when we must love the things we prize with a passionate intensity and serve them with a wholehearted loyalty, and if we are to do this, we must have faith," said Reverend Thomas S. Mutch in his sermon at the traditional Baccalaureate Service.

Noting the modern emphasis on results rather than on the methods whereby they are obtained, Dr. Mutch questioned the value of America's latest accomplishments, such as the atomic bomb and the United Nations Organization, in reference to the disturbed condition of the world. The worth of modern institutions is being questioned because the people have no faith, according to Dr. Mutch.

"As you go out to take your place and play your part in this desperately needy world, there are certain questions which you must face and answer, and the answer in each case will be an indication and a measure of your faith."

The question, "Do I matter?" should be answered positively by the Bryn Mawr seniors because by background and training they should be leaders.

The second question, "Is it worthwhile?" can be answered in the affirmative only if we have faith.

The answer to "Is there hope for success?" can be found only in the fountain of religious faith. "Victory is certain if you have faith enough to endure to the end!"

Bitter Humor, Band-aids and Toga Featured in Class Day Speeches

By Judy Marcus, '49

Class Day Speeches are always one of the high spots of the year, because they give the seniors their last chance (before comprehensives, of course) to demonstrate what they have learned during the course of four long years at Bryn Mawr. The first scholar to speak this year was a tall erudite-looking Bryn Mawrter answering to the name of Biffy Horrax, who wore a yellow head band and a rather battered white toga that undoubtedly would have been more at home covering a bed than on the back of Mark Antony. The subject of Miss Horrax's address appeared to be "My Experiences With the Inter-departmental Major," or something like that.

Miss Horrax's Bryn Mawr experiences have apparently left her with the burning conviction that "The more freshmen there are, the fewer seniors graduate." She also exhibited a great deal of intellectual curiosity, asking such questions as "Why is Henry Miller in the Raw Book Room?" But the highlight of her speech was undoubtedly her solution to the problem of what to do with the busts in Taylor. Suggested the lanky Miss H., "Distribute them evenly among the students. I've always wanted a bust!"

The second talk, delivered in front of Dalton and punctuated picturesquely by the barking of an appreciative canine, was entitled, "Spring in the World of

Elise Kraft, Chemistry Major, Named as Alternate To Hoisington for European Fellowship in 1946

Elaine Hoisington, winner of the European Fellowship, is a French major. She did honors work this year on Marcel Proust.

Last year Elaine was the winner of the Hinchman Memorial Scholarship and the Maria L. Eastman Brooke Hall Memorial Scholarship. She was awarded the Sheelah Kilroy Memorial Prize for English Composition and also the Scholarship for Advanced English. She has also held the Alice Day Jackson and the Misses Kirk scholarships.

Elaine hopes to use the Fellowship to go to the Sorbonne next year. Her outside interests include sports, painting and writing. She was prepared by the Montclair High School, New Jersey.

E. Hoisington Honored In Commencement Exercises

Goodhart, June 11. Elaine Hoisington was named by Miss McBride as the winner of the 1946 European Fellowship at the Commencement exercises. This scholarship, the highest undergraduate honor the college gives, goes to Miss Hoisington for her work in French. Elise Kraft was named as alternate to Miss Hoisington, in recognition of her work in chemistry.

The Hon. Dean Acheson, Under-Secretary of State, addressed the graduating class. Mr. Acheson's daughter-in-law, Patricia Castles Acheson, is a member of the graduating class.

The list of Seniors receiving their A. B. degrees, and of those receiving graduate degrees follows:

It is customary at this time for us to say a few words of farewell to the graduating class. It is with regret that we say it as we know we shall miss them. A preview of the gap they will leave has been felt by all of us while they were deep in their comprehensives during the past few weeks.

Yet this, the first class to graduate into a world which is once more at peace, has a future ahead which we shall watch with interest. Moreover we are eager for our chance to follow them; for their opportunity has come to do more than we as students at Bryn Mawr can do to play an active part in ensuring and maintaining a lasting peace.

Wherever they go, whatever they do we know they will do it well. We wish them all good luck and once more farewell.

The Alumnae Drive

The announcement of the Alumnae Drive for faculty salaries should make all of us pause and think of what we are getting as students at Bryn Mawr. Many of us have come to take rather for granted the excellent teaching, small classes, and large amount of individual attention which we receive. It is only on such an occasion as the announcement of the drive for faculty salaries that we begin to realize all the exceptional opportunities at our disposal.

It is traditional at Bryn Mawr that a light teaching load with time provided for research will attract a faculty of very high quality. It is quite evident, however, that even the attractions of a professorial position which includes time for independent work will not counterbalance disproportionately low salaries. It is common knowledge to everyone that the price level has risen considerably both during the war and the efforts at reconversion which have followed thereafter. No group suffers more from an inflation than the professional group with fixed incomes which do not respond to the rising trend of prices.

The Alumnae Drive is fully as much for our benefit as it is for that of the professors. The fact that the Alumnae and the college are willing to undertake such a venture shows that Bryn Mawr is continuing to balance the condition of the world with the traditional values for which it stands. We as students owe it to the college, to the faculty, to the alumnae, and to ourselves to give all the help we can to make the drive a success.

Opinion

Bowles Answers B. M. Rationing Message; Explains Views

The following letter was received by Alison Barbour, President of the Alliance.

Dear Miss Barbour:

I was very glad to have your recent message about food rationing. It was good to learn that you favor it if it is necessary as a result of shipments of food to starving countries abroad. Judging from the recent public opinion surveys, about 60 percent of the American people agree with you.

I was as anxious as anybody else to get rid of as many wartime controls as could be safely abandoned after V-J Day. But I was strongly opposed to discontinuing rationing unless we had assurances that this could be done without interfering with the task of meeting our obligations abroad. We received those assurances. But I think it is clear now that our rationing machinery was dismantled too soon.

I certainly hope that in the final analysis rationing won't be necessary. It would be difficult to reorganize the program and to recruit the necessary people to handle it. However, I know you agree that we must certainly fulfill our promises to do everything within our power to reduce starvation conditions overseas. We must do this purely and simply to save human lives. We must do it to help rebuild the economies of foreign countries which have been disrupted by war. And we must do it to help build the foundation for a lasting peace.

Heavy shipments of grain abroad will almost certainly result in reduced production of meat and poultry for consumption in this country next fall and winter.

If these shipments abroad reduce our supplies here at home to a point where we are threatened with serious maldistribution, increasing black-market activity, and even stronger upward pressure on prices, then I believe we should have the courage and good sense to go ahead with the rationing program.

Again, I hope that won't be necessary. We'll know more about it within the next thirty days. But one thing is certain. If rationing does become necessary, it can succeed only if it is done with the full approval and cooperation of the big majority of American housewives, businessmen, and farmers.

Thank you again for letting me have your opinion.

Sincerely,
Chester Bowles,

Director of Economic Stabilization.

Jenkins Adds Addresses Where Italian Relief May Be Sent

To the Editor:

I saw that you suggested in the NEWS that Dr. Florence Avitabile was a good person to whom to send Italian relief packages, and I thought I would send you her complete address:

Oppenheimer Studies Hunter Achievements

The second essay, "William Hunter and His Contemporaries," is not as clearcut in its outline. William Hunter was the less famous of the two brothers and John's teacher. His contribution to obstetrics was like that of his brother's to surgery, but was less for medicine as a whole. The reasons for the quarrel with his brother John as well as for his political actions is sought in an analysis made through descriptions of William Hunter's relations with famous contemporaries such as King George III and especially David Hume, the philosopher.

In both essays a careful and thorough interpretation of the facts concerning the two brothers and their contemporaries had been made to gain any possible clue to their personalities and thus to evaluate their achievements. A delicate balance has been kept in presenting the facts on one hand and their interpretation, the personality of the men, on the other. The essays show the fine ethical sense which is the mark of a true scholar and in addition are written well enough to be interesting as biographical material. The book is a tribute alike to the pure scientists and to those of the medical profession who are themselves scientists.

with the professors who "look benignly at my eager upturned face and say, 'Shake not thy gory locks at me!'" She recalled nostalgically the advice she had received from a friend, "who died shortly afterward," to take geology, something that Miss Chester has been doing ever since, but proved she was not totally unscientific by assuring one of her English professors that "I've always been interested in horticulture myself."

Historical Sketches

by Katrina Thomas '49

"When spring comes up the campus from the hollow
And daisies follow cherry blooms at last
And swiftly over Taylor wheels the swallow
Old voices wake the echo of the past . . ."

so went the class song of the seventh class to enter Bryn Mawr, now celebrating its 50th anniversary.

In 1892, despite a widely diffuse impression that no woman who was not forced to earn her own living goes to college, unless she has good reason to think she would not be a social success, the class of '96 arrived to gain "a higher education;" one came on the strength of an ad in "The Century Magazine". Bryn Mawr still considered itself an experiment, and the student was thought by her friends at home to be "an awe-inspiring and not entirely pleasing phenomenon."

The athletic field was completed, "picturesque with its encircling road and bicycle track" of four laps to the mile, and designed to serve as a skating pond in winter. The striking feature of athletics was the Swedish and German physical training, and records show that frail Freshmen with a "total strength" of 241.4 kg. had become female Hercules by their Senior year with a "t.s." of 292.5 kg.

The class remembers well their knee length bloomers for gym. (And even they thought they were absurd!) When they were Sophomores basketball was introduced and an ancient photo shows '96 wearing corduroy skirts for the first time daringly above the ankle, buttoned gaiters to cover the revealed leg, and leg o'mutton sleeved shirtwaists with ties.

To lectures the students wore caps and gowns. Once every two weeks in honor of ice cream for dinner they wore evening dress to that meal.

The rooms were fully furnished with tea tables, Turkish rugs, and Victorian bric a brac. Every girl had one alcohol lamp with which she studied, which lighted her to bed and over which she roasted marsh mallows.

Being an enterprising group, in 1894 when some of '96's articles were refused by the "Lantern," they published their own magazine "Unburnt Matches" (those not needed to light the lantern.) They prepared exams in the Vaux woods and chipped sheep brains out of the skulls to study for Biology. As Freshmen, they gave The Peterkin Papers and as Seniors The Critic.

The statistics of the 39 graduates a year later was that 22 had become teachers (the only profession open to educated women), 3 were married and 5 were continuing their studies. Today 2 of the graduates are great-grandmothers! 19 appeared for their 50 reunion with their hand-sewn banner of white and yellow silk.

De Laguna Gives Ethnology in '46-'47

Miss Frederica de Laguna will give next year the first-year course in General Anthropology and a new second-year course in Ethnology. There are no prerequisites for admission to the Anthropology course. In the first semester, human origins, race differences, the building of culture and background to civilization are covered. The second semester is devoted to an analysis of contemporary primitive culture, contrasted with our own; and the integration of institutions and individual roles within culture patterns is discussed.

The second . . . ethnology, will deal with the cultures of contemporary non-literate peoples. The prerequisite is first-year Anthropology.

JUST ONE YEAR AGO the Bell System was serving 21,600,000 telephones.

There are now 400,000 more telephones and Long Distance calling has steadily increased even though the war is over. Actually the volume of calling is now about 40% higher than the average for all the war years.

That's why we are asking you to please help by making only necessary Long Distance calls.

We are building new lines and new switchboards, but it will take a while to get them into use. In the meantime we'll appreciate your help and understanding.
